

X:THC

X: The Human Condition is something entirely different and unique. It is more than just an album it is an audio-visual assault on your senses.

The premise to X:THC is two complete strangers going through life sharing the same experiences but each completely unaware of the other, both of them feeling alienated not realizing that there is someone who feels the same.

The influence of Nine Inch Nail's later works when Trent Reznor decided to use the form of an LP to tell a story and trip-hop style of Portishead are evident, but X:THC uses these influences and builds on them to create a surreal but relatable landscape.

The passion and pain behind the music comes to the forefront in the two best tracks of the album 'Mr Happy' a song that is completely different to any other tracks on X:THC, and one that you should listen to with headphones to get the full ambient effect and 'A Human Flood' which is an awesome, bass driven Nine Inch Nails inspired track that includes the best lyrics of the album 'They mean no harm/By harming you.'

Michael Nova is more than just a songwriter or filmmaker, he is an intellectual who has turned his own life experiences, such as a time in his life when he got seriously ill and nearly went blind, into a brilliant work of art.

If you needed any other reason to buy this album, in order to affect real change a portion of the money for the album will go to charities to help people who feel alone. Also it is Radiohead's revolutionary style of 'choose your price' when you download the album.

X:THC is an unmissable audio/visual sensory experience.

tracklisting

1. Hide
2. Monster
3. A Human Flood
4. The Creature From The Blackened Room
5. Sleeping With One Eye Open
6. Don't Cry
7. Mr. Happy
8. Like Violins
9. You're Worth Fighting For
10. Tag You're It

